Public Affairs Introduction

The Air Force Installation Contracting Center is a worldwide-postured organization headquartered at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, providing responsive and mission-enabling enterprise acquisition solutions for efficient and effective mission and installation operations across the Air Force. In addition to the AFICC headquarters and staff, AFICC operating locations are collocated with Air Force major command headquarters, five specialized contracting squadrons aligned to those operating locations, and three enterprise sourcing squadrons, and the Defense Technical Information Center at Offutt AFB, Nebraska. AFICC has over 750 personnel, performing above-wing contracting across the Air Force enterprise and supporting over 3,000 contracting professionals executing Air Force missions worldwide, approximately $58 billion over the last five years. AFICC plays an essential role in accomplishing the Air Force mission by providing non-organic capabilities to the Air Force and joint warfighter. It provides business advice and specialized contract support to Air Force major commands, contracting authority

Description
By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, SOWTs have been a critical asset to the war on terror. Alongside special tactics teammates from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental to forecast weather impacts to operations. In a location like Afghanistan, this was vital to successful air-ground operations. However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire Air Force Special Operations Command formation drove Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding the capacity and lethality of Air Force special tactics. "Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the low end to the high end and everywhere in between," said Lt. Gen. Brad Webb, AFSOC commander. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to the National Defence Strategy." Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding.

Public Affairs Program Management Notes

The Air Force Installation Contracting Center is a worldwide-postured organization headquartered at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, providing responsive and mission-enabling enterprise acquisition solutions for efficient and effective mission and installation operations across the Air Force. In addition to the AFICC headquarters and staff, AFICC operating locations are collocated with Air Force major command headquarters, five specialized contracting squadrons aligned to those operating locations, and three enterprise sourcing squadrons, and the Defense Technical Information Center at Offutt AFB, Nebraska. AFICC has over 750 personnel, performing above-wing contracting across the Air Force enterprise and supporting over 3,000 contracting professionals executing Air Force missions worldwide, approximately $58 billion over the last five years. AFICC plays an essential role in accomplishing the Air Force mission by providing non-organic capabilities to the Air Force and joint warfighter. It provides business advice and specialized contract support to Air Force major commands, contracting authority

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, SOWTs have been a critical asset to the war on terror. Alongside special tactics teammates from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental to forecast weather impacts to operations. In a location like Afghanistan, this was vital to successful air-ground operations...

Afghanistan's Taliban and U.S. representatives have held six rounds of peace talks since October in the Gulf state of Qatar, where the group maintains a political office. While there have been significant steps toward a deal to end the nearly 18 years of war, those diplomatic gains have come with some costs — namely travel costs for the Taliban according to the spokesman for the Democratic chair...

Even though women have been Air Force pilots since the 1970s, Tighe's 5 feet, 1 inch stature could have stood in her way. Tighe, however, never thought of the 5-feet-4-inch height standard as an eliminating factor, merely an obstacle. "If you are really dedicated, you will go out and do it, no matter what stands in your way," Tighe said. "Don't let the first person who tells you 'no you can't do it' stop you..."

Description

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental information to successful air-ground operations.

However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire spectrum of conflict has led the Air Force to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance. "Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the commander in chief to the commander," said Lt. Gen. Michael E. Wurster, commander of the 1st Special Operations Wing. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to broadening the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance."

SOWT Airmen have been an integral piece of Special Tactics with unique training to conduct multi-domain reconnaissance and surveillance across the spectrum of conflict and crisis. As special reconnaissance, or SR, they will continue to maintain their application of lethal and non-lethal air-to-ground integration of AirPower.

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, SOWTs have been a critical asset to the war on terror. Alongside special tactics teammates from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental to forecast weather impacts to operations. In a location like Afghanistan, this was vital to successful air-ground operations.

However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire Air Force Special Operations Command formation drove Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding the capacity and lethality of Air Force special tactics.

"Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the low end to the high end and everywhere in between," said Lt. Gen. Brad Webb, AFSOC commander. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to the National Defence Strategy." Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding.

Description

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, SOWTs have been a critical asset to the war on terror. Alongside special tactics teammates from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental to forecast weather impacts to operations. In a location like Afghanistan, this was vital to successful air-ground operations.

However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire Air Force Special Operations Command formation drove Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding the capacity and lethality of Air Force special tactics. "Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the low end to the high end and everywhere in between," said Lt. Gen. Brad Webb, AFSOC commander. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to the National Defence Strategy." Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding.

Response

SOWT Airmen have been an integral piece of Special Tactics with unique training to conduct multi-domain reconnaissance and surveillance across the spectrum of conflict and crisis. As special reconnaissance, or SR, they will continue to maintain their application of lethal and non-lethal air-to-ground integration of AirPower.

The Air Force Installation Contracting Center is a worldwide-postured organization headquartered at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, providing responsive and mission-enabling enterprise acquisition solutions for efficient and effective mission and installation operations across the Air Force. In addition to the AFICC headquarters and staff, AFICC operating locations are collocated with Air Force major command headquarters, five specialized contracting squadrons aligned to those operating locations, and three enterprise sourcing squadrons, and the Defense Technical Information Center at Offutt AFB, Nebraska. AFICC has over 750 personnel, performing above-wing contracting across the Air Force enterprise and supporting over 3,000 contracting professionals executing Air Force missions worldwide, approximately $58 billion over the last five years. AFICC plays an essential role in accomplishing the Air Force mission by providing non-organic capabilities to the Air Force and joint warfighter. It provides business advice and specialized contract support to Air Force major commands, contracting authority

Description

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental information to successful air-ground operations.

However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire spectrum of conflict and crisis has led Air Force leaders to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, or SR, teams. "Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the commander-in-chief down to the individual soldier," said Lt. Gen. Michael E. Wurster, commander. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance teams."

Response***

SOWT Airmen have been an integral piece of Special Tactics with unique training to conduct multi-domain reconnaissance and surveillance across the spectrum of conflict and crisis. As special reconnaissance, or SR, they will continue to maintain their application of lethal and non-lethal air-to-ground integration of AirPower.

Description

By combining the core skills of special operations forces with their meteorology skills, SOWTs have been a critical asset to the war on terror. Alongside special tactics teammates from forward deployed locations, SOWTs would gather, assess and interpret environmental to forecast weather impacts to operations. In a location like Afghanistan, this was vital to successful air-ground operations.

However, in an era of great power competition, the need to look critically at the entire Air Force Special Operations Command formation drove Headquarters Air Force and AFSOC to broaden the skillset of special tactics teams. On April 30, SOWT became special reconnaissance, expanding the capacity and lethality of Air Force special tactics. "Air Commandos need to operate effectively across the spectrum of conflict, from the low end to the high end and everywhere in between," said Lt. Gen. Brad Webb, AFSOC commander. "It's what the nation expects from us and this transition demonstrates our commitment to the National Defence Strategy."
